People have often commented that Resurgence is full of opinion, full of theory, full of philosophy and there is little of practical interest. My answer has been that there are a number of magazines devoted to practical matters. The scope of Resurgence is not how to do but why to do. Nevertheless we have given over a large section of this issue to the personal experiences of some of those who have stood out against the mainstream. And we would like to publish more articles of how people have made their own alternatives in their lives and work.
