Our sincere thanks go to David Morrison who has edited the 'Faces and Facets of Scotland' feature in this issue. Without his help and effort this would not have been possible. This feature presents the identity of a nation through the perspective of its culture and literature and brings in the political aspect in a balanced proportion.

In the not too distant future we will see the people of Scotland take control of their own lives and decide their own destiny. This decentralist dimension will gradually spread throughout the world. The Bretons, the Basques, the tribes of Africa, the Armenians, the Lithuanians, the Tibetans, the Tamils, the Amerindians: small nations and small communities of the world will become self-reliant and master their own lives. Cities, suburbs, districts and counties will become self-governing eco-nations and eco-regions. This feature on Scotland is a small contribution to that vision.
